FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

MFAM reboots to Motley Fool Asset Management
Announces Planned Conversion of Mutual Funds into ETFs; Intentions to Launch more ETFs

Alexandria, VA (September 28, 2021) – Motley Fool Asset Management, an affiliate of The Motley Fool, LLC,* today is proud to announce the rebranding of their business - which supports over $1.7 billion assets under management in Mutual Funds and ETFs - to better reflect its history and investment foundation consistent with its parent company.

“We’re bringing ‘the Fool’ back,” said Kelsey Mowrey, President of Motley Fool Asset Management. “While Motley Fool Asset Management is a separate company, Motley Fool is an important part of our name as well as our history and culture.”

As part of the re-brand, Motley Fool Asset Management announces it will convert two Mutual Funds (Ticker: FOOLX/FOIIX and Ticker: TMFGX/FOGIX) into ETFs prior to year-end.

The mutual fund conversions, representing approximately $1 billion in assets, will join Motley Fool Asset Management’s current ETF offerings alongside the Motley Fool 100 ETF (Ticker: TMFC), and the Small Cap Growth ETF (Ticker: MFMS). All Motley Fool Asset Management Funds and ETFs are housed with The RBB Fund, Inc., whose service platform allows Motley Fool Asset Management to focus on managing the Funds’ investments.

“Considering the current environment, ETFs are a more desirable and shareholder friendly structure,” said Arnold Reichman, Chairman of The RBB Fund, Inc. Board. “RBB is proud to assist Motley Fool Asset Management in converting the Mutual Funds into ETFs”. A discussion of the benefits associated with the ETF structure can be found in the information statement/prospectus recently filed with the SEC.

Chief Investment Officer, Bryan Hinmon, oversees the Four Core Pillars that determine the quality of potential investments for actively managed strategies: Management & Culture; Economics of the Business; Competitive Advantage; and Trajectory. “This qualitative framework is the foundation for all our actively managed products.” Stated Hinmon. “We look forward to offering new investment strategies, including both actively and passively managed solutions, over the coming years.”
